VIRELESS HUNT FOR WELLMAN'S AIRSHIP

Backers Think He Has Reached Point Where He Would Head Acress.

The wireless people fished:4 lay yesterday and last eight for Wellman and the dirigible Am there was no asswer to the in call W N. W N. W N statement saltips in the North Atlant and from the many public and stations along the coast.

At the rate Wellman and hi ending along the America, thenir still aloft should have been off Sable Island, N. S., at 8 o'clock last night. but the Marconi station at Campa N. S., couldn't connect with Jack frwin, the wireless operator of the America.

Up to midnight last night Two Sun had received wireless word from twentyfive Atlantic liners, none of which mentioned the America, although all of them presumably had been calling to Irwin for a tip as to his whereabouts. The westbound Italian, San Guglielmo, reported herself 200 miles east of Sable Island at 7:15 o'clock last night and she had no news of the America. The Columbia crackled her own location to the Marconi station at Cape Race, but gave no report of the balloon

From Nantucket to Cape Race the wireess operators logged ships who asked for news but had no news to give. Many of them were in positions where they might have been expected to hoop up aerials with the America. The Numidian was off Cape Race, as were the Ivernia, the President Grant and the Teutonic. The Sable Island wireless questioned the 'edric hopefully when they caught her 135 miles southwest of Sable Island, because she was about where the America should have been, but the Cedric knew nothing. Also southwest of Sable Island were the Madonna. La Gascogne and the Kroonland, but they shoved on, with only formal reports for the station logbooks. With no word from Wellman in thirtysix hours since 12:40 P. M. on Sunday when Jack Irwin flashed that all was well the friends of the America's crew were getting anxious at midnight last night There was absolutely no indication as to where the dirigible had veeredwhether she was still pegging away oward Ireland or whether she dropped somewhere on top of the United States or in Canada's basement. If the America is still sailing she has beaten all records for continuous flight of dirigibles, possibly all records for endurance by gas bags Count Zeppelin on May 31, 1909, sailed his dirigible thirtyeven hours from Friedrichshafen to Bitterfeld and return, travelling more than 850 miles At midnight last night if the America was still going her captain Melville Vaniman, had sailed her 63 hours and 47 minutes. At Atlantic City Well travelled at least 1,000 miles. They knew that Wellman would decide ast night whether to head across toward Europe or turn around and scoot for the hangar that is kept warm for him at Atlantic City Wellman told them before he was pushed off on Saturday morning hat he would start back for Atlantic City he moment that he and his men decided hat the voyage to Europe is impracticable Lerov Chamberlain, on-in-law, said last night: "So far as we can make out by study of the maps and charts which we have! the America has reached a point where it can be decided whether there is a chance to reach Europe. It is almost safe to say that this decision is being reached now or will be reached within the next few ours by the men aboard the America I believe that the America at nightfall to-day was off St. Pierre, Newfoundland and had turned east almost directly in the transatlantic steamship lane. We are confident that some message showing our calculations to be correct will soon reach one of the wireless stations.

Wellman asked President Salus of the Atlantic City syndicate that is backing the venture, to keep the America's hangar up and ready for him. Lots of folks along the Boardwalk and around the hotels were betting that Wellman Ireland. They were willing to hand it to Wellman and especially Vaniman for an apparently sincere attempt to reach NEW COUNTERFEIT $10 NOTE. Europe by the sir route, but they were betting that nothing much would happen

Mrs. Wellman, her daughters, Vaniman, Salus and others interested in the venture were at the Hotel Chalfonts in Atlantic City anxiously awaiting some news of the America's whereabouts. Naturally Mrs. Wellman was worried. but she kept optimistic and even discussed whether it wouldn't be a good thing to start for Ireland or England harles H.
